OUR HUMAN RIGHTS COMMITMENT

Tricon is committed to respecting human rights in our operations and relationships with third parties. Our Responsible Sourcing & Product Stewardship Standard outlines our supply chain expectations to respect freedom from forced labor, modern slavery, and human trafficking.

MODERN SLAVERY RISK MANAGEMENT AND DUE DILIGENCE

Risk Assessment

Commodity trading companies like Tricon face numerous challenges in human rights and modern slavery due diligence, due to the type of supply chains and level of influence and leverage available. Tricon assesses key value chain risks related to modern slavery as part of its sustainability risk management process. We may also consider geography, transaction value, and characteristics of the third party in assessing risk. Potential risks include forced labor in the production or transportation of products purchased by Tricon. To help mitigate these risks, we have a due diligence management system in place.

Policies and Processes

Human rights, including modern slavery issues, are embedded in Tricon's internal management system, including the following policies, processes, and guidelines:

- Compliance Policies
- Sustainability Policy
- Worker Welfare Guidelines
- Responsible Sourcing & Product Stewardship Standard
- Sustainability Risk Management and Due Diligence Process

Screening of Business Relationships

Tricon requires a "Know Your Counterparty" (KYC) questionnaire from product suppliers and customers as part of its onboarding process and includes a certification to comply with Tricon's key policies and utilizes a supplementary due diligence questionnaire for higher-risk third party representatives. We strive to effectively integrate human rights in these processes.

We also utilize EcoVadis assessments and third-party audits within our ongoing due diligence processes, on a limited basis, as part of our responsible sourcing program and commitments with Together for Sustainability.

Contract Requirements

Tricon's standard purchase order clauses include references to human rights.

Training and Awareness

Training and awareness are key parts of the due diligence program and include ethics training and basic human rights and worker welfare (including modern slavery) awareness for employees. All employees are also required to complete annual Code of Conduct training, which reinforces expectations on workplace conduct, including the prevention of harassment, discrimination, and bullying. We reinforced training on the Tricon Listens Helpline and our Reporting Misconduct policy in 2025.

Reporting Concerns

The Tricon Listens Helpline is freely available to all stakeholders, internal and external, to report any issues related to modern slavery, including anonymously and with protections from retaliation.

Measuring Effectiveness

Our Sustainability Risk Management and Due Diligence Process includes indicators to assess performance, such as screening of suppliers and grievance metrics. We communicate externally on key human rights indicators in our sustainability report.

NEXT STEPS

We take a view to continuous improvement and learning and seek to collaborate with industry and other stakeholders to improve respect for human rights. For more information on our results and next steps, see our sustainability report.
